
INPUT AND

INTERACTION

IN LANGUAGE

ACQUISITION

EDITED BY

CLARE GALLAWAY

BRIAN J. RICHARDS

Input and interaction in language acquisition

Edited by

Clare Gallaway

Centre for Audiology, Education of the Deaf and Speech Pathology University of Manchester

and

Brian J. Richards

*Department of Arts and Humanities in Education
University of Reading*

جامعة بومرداس
كلية الآداب و اللغات
مكتبة الكلية

1528

رقم الجرد

جامعة بومرداس
كلية الآداب و اللغات
مكتبة الكلية

81'232/952

الشفرة

جامعة بومرداس
كلية العلوم
مكتبة
P.119.5.156 1994/02

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of figures	page xi
List of tables	xii
List of contributors	xiii
Preface	xv
Introduction	1
Beginning from Baby Talk: twenty years of research on input in interaction	3
Catherine E. Snow
1 Introduction	3
2 A modest beginning	4
3 Future possibilities	7
4 Conclusion	12
Part I General issues	13
1 The language of primary caregivers	15
Julian M. Pine
1 Introduction	15
2 Why is CDS used?	16
3 Effects and non-effects of CDS	20
4 How is CDS used by the child?	25
5 CDS and stylistic differences in early language development	33
6 Conclusion	37
2 The changing role of negative evidence in theories of language development	38
Jeffrey L. Sokolov and Catherine E. Snow
1 Historical origins	38
2 The paving of the nativist road	38
3 Parallel roads: nativist and empiricist accounts	40
4 The empiricist road upgraded	43
5 The existence of implicit negative evidence	46

6	Beyond the existence proof: the effects of negative evidence	49
7	Issues in defining negative evidence	50
8	A multiple factors framework	50
9	Robust learning mechanisms	52
10	Functional readiness for learning	53
11	Benefits of a multiple factors framework	53
3	Crosslinguistic and crosscultural aspects of language addressed to children	56
	Elena V. M. Lieven
1	Introduction	56
2	The range of environments in which language is learned	58
3	Language socialization	64
4	Issues and problems in studying input crosslinguistically	69
5	Conclusions	72
4	Child-directed speech and influences on language acquisition: methodology and interpretation	74
	Brian J. Richards
1	Introduction	74
2	Child-directed speech and individual differences: the universals fallacy	75
3	Inferring causation	78
4	The nature of the evidence for environmental effects	81
5	Passive observation studies using correlational statistics	84
6	Experimental designs in language acquisition research	102
7	Conclusion	104
	Part II Specific aspects of input and interaction	107
5	The rest of the family: the role of fathers and siblings in early language development	109
	Michelle E. Barton and Michael Tomasello
1	Introduction	109
2	Fathers	112
3	Siblings	121
4	The child's expanding social world	131
6	Phonetic and prosodic aspects of Baby Talk	135
	Alan Cruttenden
1	Introduction	135
2	Baby Talk phonetics	136
3	Baby Talk prosody	139
4	Facilitation	142
5	Fine-tuning	146
6	Crosslinguistic variation	149
7	Summary and conclusion	152

7	Language learning at home and school	153
	Peter Geekie and Bridie Raban
1	The structure of classroom discourse	153
2	Classroom discourse and the development of meaning	156
3	Language and learning at school and home	157
4	Vygotsky: sign operations and cognitive development	159
5	Bruner and the Language Acquisition Support System	160
6	Comprehension and learning in young children	162
7	The nature of Geekie's study	164
8	Becoming competent participants in the writing session	165
9	Learning to write	167
10	Conclusions	167
Part III	Types of language learner	181
8	Language interaction with atypical language learners	183
	Gina Conti-Ramsden
1	Introduction	183
2	Atypical language learners	183
3	Parent-child interaction	184
4	Semantically contingent responses	187
5	Directiveness and control	190
6	Intervention and parent-child interaction	191
7	Under-researched areas	193
8	Concluding remarks	195
9	Interaction and childhood deafness	197
	Clare Gallaway and Bencie Woll
1	Introduction	197
2	Interaction and the acquisition of spoken language by deaf children	199
3	Sign language development	208
4	Acquiring language in the absence of input	215
5	Conclusions	217
10	Input and interaction in second language acquisition	219
	Marjorie Bingham Wesche
1	Introduction	219
2	Typology of modified codes	221
3	The nature of linguistic and interactional modifications in Foreigner Discourse	225
4	Other kinds of language input to learners	235
5	Theoretical perspectives on the role of the linguistic environment in second language acquisition	238
6	Current research	244
7	Conclusions	248

Conclusion	251
Conclusions and directions	253
Brian J. Richards and Clare Gallaway
1 Introduction	253
2 Describing child-directed speech	254
3 Functions of child-directed speech	260
4 Implications for professionals	265
 References	270
Author index	308
Subject index	316